GOT TEA?

First Earth Day EVER!

Robert Rauschenberg made the very first one for the very first Earth Day, which was celebrated in April 1970.

Rauschenberg was tapped to make the poster after a massive oil spill off the coast of Southern California in 1969. Wisconsin Senator Gaylord Nelson proposed Earth Day on April 22, 1970, as an initiative to bring awareness to the dangers of pollution, about which this poster would spread awareness.

The Earth Day poster shows a bald eagle, a symbol of the United States, at its center. The eagle is washed over in muted tones of brown and rust, which convey a sense of environmental contamination. Surrounding the eagle is an array of jarring and disparate images: burnt-out cars littered with detritus, a gorilla (an endangered animal of the generation), sullied waters, aerial views of highways scarring landscapes, and smoke billowing from industrial factories.
